1. Infrastructure to Support Outdoor Activities like Sports:

When the campus size allows it, the school can have the opportunity to build infrastructure that lets students choose and play from a wider variety of sports. Within a massive campus, management can also afford to build football court and cricket grounds. While for indoor sports arena, campus can include sports like shuttle badminton, table tennis, caroms etc.

3. Clean & Green Campus Initiatives

With a large campus, college authorities can teach students about the importance of keeping their environment clean. If they are taught the value of our environment with Green Campus initiatives at a young age, they are going to grow up to be more sensitive towards pollution and other environmental issues. These initiatives can include throwing out garbage and planting saplings of trees around the campus. The need of the hour for the nation is to educate our young citizens both personal hygiene and social responsibility.

4. Enough Space for Students to Explore and Enjoy:

A large campus can be a gift for students who are still in their growing age. It is a natural tendency for young children to explore any place out of curiosity and sheer childishness. When they're allowed to do this at college, they are going to view it as a positive and safe place to enjoy themselves within the safety of the campus. This makes them feel like the college is their second home which in turn boosts trust in college and learning capabilities.
